

New Article

(Jun 26, 2011 3:33 PM CDT) The Souris River began a slow retreat from Minot today with no further flood damage in the city, but officials warned danger would remain for several days until the highest water passed. More than 4,000 homes and hundreds of businesses flooded when the Souris flowed over levees Friday, but crews have dealt only with isolated problems since then, including a leaky dike that was reinforced last night. Click to read about how the town is dealing with the disaster. The Army Corps of Engineers was sandbagging in Sawyer and Velva, two small downstream towns of just a few hundred people, that face crests later this week.

Ground Truth

North Dakota Flooding: Souris River Waters Ebb, But 4,000 Homes Damaged

LLM Generated
Headline

The Army Corps of Engineers was sandbagging in Sawyer and Velva

Prompt Generated
Headline

more than 4,000 homes and hundreds of businesses flooded when the Souris flowed over levee